

AnyGood?

Trust in 2018

Despite dominating the way the UK finds work - recruitment agencies are as yet unregulated. New research of over 1000 UK adults by the peer-to-peer recruitment platform AnyGood? and ExplainTheMarket reveal major problems with how well things are working.

52%

Half of all people (52%) that have used recruitment agencies in the last year do not feel they were dealt with honestly.

90%

For the specific task of "making sure the job is right for you" over 90% of people say they do not trust recruitment agencies to do a good job.

90%

Over 90% want the jobs search industry to stop using computer "algorithms" and rely more on real human beings.

50%

Half of people in the UK (50%) expect to have more than 5 jobs in their working lives. 12% expect to have more than 10 jobs.

63%

63% are using more online recruitment resources than 3 years ago.

54%

Majority (54%) believe it is not reasonable to charge fees over £7,000 for recruiting a £50k pa job.

80%

80% of job hunters are very concerned about where the recruitment sector is heading.

45%

Over 45% of people are now using recruitment consultancies less or not at all.

34%

34% think a traditional CV is no longer essential.

83%

83% of us would consider generating additional income by recommending professionals in their network.